

How Riding A Horse Makes Me Feel....

Riding a horse makes me feel fast as a cheetah, brave as a soldier, important as a king, and free as a bird soaring through the sky. It feels like I was born to ride horses because since the first time I sat on the back of a horse it felt natural as breathing air or eating pizza. Even when I was still a little boy I would run into the horse arena galloping, neighing, and pretending to be a horse. Now that I am bigger and get to actually ride it feels like a dream come true.

When I look into my horses eyes I see my best friend. When I ride my horse we are a team and it feels awesome, cool, and happy. It feels like we can go anywhere and do anything. When I feel stressed about school or get in a fight with a friend all I have to do is ride my horse and the problems seem to fade away. Riding has also taught me that when you fall off you have to get up, knock the dirt off, and get back up on your horse to ride again. My Mom says I will use this lesson a lot as I go through life.

When I ride its hard to explain but I have joy in me. I love horses so much that I wish I could ride forever and never get off my horse. When I am riding over the poles and my horse starts to accidentally canter I feel like Superman. It feels like we can canter up to the sky and into the clouds. I can hear my trainer and my mom yelling to stop cantering that I am not ready yet but I love the feeling and can feel the big smile on my face. I have always loved horses and want horses to always be a part of my life. Horses are my passion in life.

By Jonathan Brannan